Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Scott house, 204 South Main Street, is a 2½-story frame dwelling with gable roof. The side-hall planned main block is three bays across (with the entrance in the right bay) and two bays deep. A lower 2½-story gable-roofed wing built by the owners in 1956 extends to the rear.

The early 19th century main block shows many similarities to other Berlin houses in the area. A small room located at the end of the hall creates a floor plan similar to the gable-fronted early-19th century houses in the town with a 90° turn in the orientation of the entrance. The stairs, with raised paneling below, rise and turn at a landing immediately to the right of the entrance. The entrance surround contains a decorative transom and side lights with raised panels below. The entrance is covered by a small porch with a brick floor of recent vintage. The porch features simple columns topped by flat wooden arches beneath a cornice containing modillions identical in design to those located on the cornice at the roof line. First floor windows are 9/6; and second floor windows, 6/6. A large interior chimney containing four flues rises in the peak of the gable on the south side. The structure is sheathed in wooden shingles placed over beaded weatherboards, according to the owner.

The interior of the Scott house contains much of its original material. A large opening between the parlors appears to have been made in the late 19th century, and the present owners have made some discernable changes. Remaining unaltered are features such as raised panels with molding under first floor windows, distinctive eight-paneled doors on the first floor with the second floor doors of a distinctly different design featuring horizontal panels.

Of special note are a group of out-buildings, located to the rear of the dwelling. Included are a log smoke house covered with hand-riven shingles, a privy with boxed cornice and decorative end boards, and two other gable-roofed out-buildings that merit further study.
